Layers of the Rainforest

Tropical rainforests are made up of distinct layers.

The forest floor is very hot and humid and little grows there. This part of the rainforest gets less than 2% of the sun's light. It is covered in a thin layer of fallen leaves which rot away quickly.

Next are the shrub layer and the understory – a dark place, where lots of insects, frogs and snakes can be found amongst the few plants which don't need much sunlight.

Above this is the canopy, where most trees stop growing and where up to 90% of rainforest creatures can be found. This sunny area, rich in fruit and seeds, can be as high as thirty metres off the ground.

Finally, the few giant trees that thrust themselves above the dense canopy layer are called the emergent layer.
